CHRONOLOGY 1946-65

VOLUME I 1946-55

June 1970

HISTORICAL STAFF
CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY

Foreword

This chronology provides the Agency historian with a brief, factual introduction to the main currents of the two turbulent decades of world affairs after World War II, when the United States emerged as leader of the Free World and when the Central Intelligence Agency evolved as a significant instrument of US national security policy in the cold war. The chronology reflects CIA's development and progress not only as a central agency for the analysis of intelligence information and the preparation of strategic intelligence estimates but also as an active, operational member of the US and Allied security system.

The chronology consists of four parallel columns: column 1 cites occurrences of world-wide significance; column 2, events of national interest; column 3, developments in the US intelligence and national security communities; and column 4, milestones in the evolution of the Agency. Included are public events of major political, diplomatic, military, and technological significance, as well as selected intra-Agency activities.

In format and detail the chronology is necessarily selective and terse. The historian will, of course, wish to exploit the many specialized chronologies in his field--both classified and unclassified. In addition, he will also find useful the historical compilations prepared by the Library of Congress for the Committee on Foreign Relations of the United States Senate such as Background Information Relating to Southeast Asia and Vietnam, 5th rev ed (91st Congress, 1st Session, 1969) and A Select Chronology and Background Documents Relating to the Middle East, 1st rev ed (91st Congress, 1st Session, 1969). The numerous entries in the Annual Index of the New York Times provide details on the day-to-day progress of public affairs; Neville Williams' Chronology of the Modern World, 1st American ed, New York, David McKay, 1967, is an important British compilation; Andre Fontaine's two chronologies in his History of the Cold War, New York, Pantheon, 1965, illuminate events from the French point of view; and the latter part of William L. Langer's An Encyclopedia of World History, 4th ed, Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1968, furnishes a chronological survey of the postwar period in its broadest historical perspective.

Foreword

This preliminary chronology of key personnel in the major components of Support Services has been compiled on the basis of information supplied to the CIA Historical Staff by the various components in the DDS. It is intended for the use of DDS historical writers, pending the publication of an index to key personnel in the Agency based on Agency Regulations. This index is now being prepared by the Historical Staff. To a limited degree, the data in this preliminary chronology have been adjusted to conform with regulatory information collected and with information contained in Antecedents to the Clandestine Services: An Organizational Chronology, 1 October 1945 - 1 August 1952 (Clandestine Services Group, Historical Staff, August 1967). Readers who are able to supply missing information or correct erroneous data are urged to communicate with the Support Services Historical Officer, CIA Historical Staff, Room 203 Key Building.

MEMORANDUM FOR: Historical Officers and Writers
in the CIA Historical Program

FROM : Chief, CIA Historical Staff

SUBJECT : Chronology 1946-65

1. The CIA Historical Staff has recently compiled and published for your use the attached Chronology 1946-65, Volumes I and II.

2. You will note that events of historical interest have been tabulated in four parallel columns in chronological order--one column each for international, national, community, and CIA events. The page is designed to facilitate the identification of related incidents.

3. The Chronology is not, of course, intended to take the place of basic documents that would normally be researched and exploited by the historical writer. It should, however, be useful in providing the writer with a quick, general survey of the events of broad interest that occurred during a given time period.

4. This Chronology is a first edition based on data currently available to the CIA Historical Staff. Readers having information that would assist the Staff in refining or correcting entries in this edition are invited to communicate with the CIA Historical Staff, 203 Key Bldg., x2621.

5. I trust you will find this tool useful in your historical research and writing, and I welcome your comments and suggestions.
